1224 MAGIC WALL IN PUBLIC LOCATION TRANSFORMING THE SCENERY

With the increase of the negative environmental impacts, which produce criminogenic conditions, it is necessary a pressing change of behavior and habits, based on commitment and protagonism, to minimize them in the school environment. This work seeks to systematize and analyze an Art-Education experience applied to Education that triggered a curious positive change, probably replicable model. The locus was the Alexandria dos Santos Pita Municipal School, in Pirajá, a peripheral district of Salvador, Bahia: a context of material and social difficulties and marked degradation and depredation of the facilities. The Magic Wall allowed us to approach the cognitive set validated by the students, revalorizing the endogenous (school) and exogenous spaces (community), making them areas with identity and belonging, allowing to identify others that reflect negatively on school environment. It was observed that the school should be revisited with practices that exercise affectivity and citizenship, providing rediscovery of its role in promoting social relations and reducing environmental conditions that facilitate risk behaviors and social harm to young people.

1222 THE POLICE APPROACH AND CRIMINAL STIGMA: HOMICIDE AS A FORM OF SOCIAL CONTROL?

The theme of this article, initially, refers us to the reflection about concepts related to violence, non-violence and power; The human and non-human as well as the preservation of people's physical integrity and human rights. Human Dignity as the end of our actions. We all want freedom not to be afraid, but from the perspective of human rights this question will depend on whether the state or even society may be against or in favor of the individual. What do people labeled deviant, "useless" have in common? At the very least, they share: "The label and the experience of being labeled as deviant, as well as being labeled a criminal, is only necessary to commit a single crime. However, the word carries with it many connotations that specify auxiliary traits characteristic of any person who carries the label. It is presumed that a man convicted of burglary is someone who will also assault other houses; The police, by collecting known offenders for investigation after a crime, operate based on this premise. In addition, it is considered likely that this person could commit other types of crime, because he turned out to be a person without 'respect for the law'. Thus, contact with the penal system by a deviant act exposes the person to the probability of having his or her image exposed as deviant or undesirable. Faced with such an approach, some people may be labeled deviant, criminal "without actually breaking a rule." Thus, the police approach and stigma of the criminal, from the point of view of Law and Human Rights, given the current numbers indicate a significant trend of deaths of criminals, which can generate a questioning if, in fact, it is a Social control.
